

Winnie the Pooh: Thoughtful Resting Spot.

Themed resting spot for Disneyland Resort.

Area concept/layout.

Summary:

O' Bother, after a long day in the park guests need a place to sit and rest. Tucked deep within The Hundred Acre Wood is a small spot that invites you to just do nothing.

Area Backstory:

There is a small section of the Hundred Acre Wood that Christopher Robin would always bring his pals to have picnics. It is a quiet place where only the sound of the nearby brook and the occasional bumbling of a bumble bee can be heard. One day, Winnie the Pooh had the little thought of inviting his friends from Disneyland to this charming spot. "Perhaps one of them could help me reach the Hunny Tree" Pooh thought. The entire gang agreed with Pooh and got to work on creating a path to their secret place.

Area Purpose:

The area is designed as a themed resting spot for park guests. It will be heavily shaded while offering plenty of seating and areas for guests to charge their phones. Small activities for the children will give parents time to relax from their blustery, busy day.

Theming in the area:

Pulled right out of an A.A. Milne book, the area will immerse visitors into the Hundred Acre Wood. The spot is lush with large trees to provide plenty of shade. All the benches in the area will appear to be constructed by Eeyore. The same way Eeyore constructed his home, the benches will be made from a bunch of sticks. There will be balloons hanging in the trees over the seating area. The balloon strings will make their way down the trees to the guests serving as outlets for guests to charge their phones. While resting people can hear the sounds of Christopher Robin and his pals playing in the distance.

Interactive elements:

Younger guests will find plenty to do while their parents relax. Pooh and his pal's homes will be surrounding the area. Kids are invited to knock on the front door of each home and hear a greeting from their respective owner. A small bridge offers an easy interactive game for children to play. Christopher Robin has left a small bucket of sticks allowing kids to play their own game of "Pooh Sticks." A wagon with a chalkboard inside will allow players to keep score. In the center of the area is the infamous Hunny Tree. Young guests, who find themselves brave enough, can climb up to the top of the Hunny Tree. At the top, guests will find Pooh stuck in the tree! How will they get down? A slide made from slippery honey leads the way!

After exploring the Hundred Acre Wood kids should find their phones, and parents, fully charged and ready to continue with their day at Disneyland.
